Fractures is a fictional study of Roman politics at multiple levels: within a family, within a clan, among a variety of politicians in Rome, and between Rome and other states. In 151 BC Servius Fulvius Flaccus has returned from a tour of duty in Hispania, been part of the Triumph of his last commander, and now wants to resume his real work: advancing through the public offices that a man of his rank should be able to hold. Still, Servius has his work cut out for him. He has to find ways to use his new money. He has to establish himself in the inner circle of his remote father and his fathers most important advisor, Cousin Quintus. And he has to follow the orders of Marcus Porcius Cato, his political patron, who intends to force the senate to declare war against Carthage. Servius father wants to give Servius a thorough understanding of the collection of estates and businesses that he may inherit. This means Servius gets another assignment: to travel throughout Italy and audit the books of all his fathers villas. Luckily for Servius, his trips outside Rome are carefully timed so that he can help Cato when Cato needs him, and can at other times be kept where he can run into no political harm. Servius father also directs him to pull together a coalition that can help elect the candidates his father favors in the elections seven or eight months away. Servius immediately begins to use the formal suppers his slave, Telamon, prepares to lure to his house the men he wants to use politically. And, in the process of getting ready for the coming...
