Excerpt: . . . put down quite easily in almost any location. They Business processes and information also provide the financing and the feasibility work, technology and will hand-hold the producer-investors through the Distributed control systems entire process. They can offer an entire package--from feasibility study to turn-key and beyond. Prior to the mid-1980s, process automation was This prospect didnt exist in the early 1990s, when comprised of analog loop controls and complex pneu-there were still a lot of questions on what was the right matic controls with individual, large circuit boards way to build a plant. Because there were no standard-dedicated to each control loop. These systems were ized designs, builders of a 30-million-gallon-a-year normally located in control rooms, so the sensors and plant had to go a more traditional construction route--controller outputs had to be physically connected to hiring a process firm, a detailed engineering design the control room. This resulted in large cable runs full firm, and a construction management firm. A prospec-of wires and tubing. Because the systems were bulky tive plant had to assume every responsibility. It may and required direct interconnections with the process, have been the first and only ethanol plant that the there were often several satellite control rooms for hired construction firm had ever built. So the lack of each part (or subpart) of the process. These systems experience and the associated uncertainty added sig-required sophisticated maintenance by skilled instru-nificantly to start-up costs and subsequently to each ment technicians, and data-logging was done on strip step in the...
